Today's emerging market debt asset class is much more than just a dollar denominated market
Since 1994, emerging markets have established better overall debt structure with the development of local debt markets, which helps avoid structurally driven problems of the past (ie, Mexico in 1994)

Investment Outlook and Strategies

- USD Sovereign: spreads have normalized, with higher beta outperforming. Speculative premium has been removed; so we favor certain mid-quality and smaller, overlooked, frontier markets
- USD Corporate: attractive valuations and growth prospects offer meaningful value; premiums are reduced, but selected issuers are attractive. We favor:
 - National leaders (in banking or industry) with demonstrated or implied government support
 - Global leaders in their sectors
 - Companies that stand to benefit from strengthening local demand
- EM Local Rates: expect rate-hiking cycle given higher growth rates; selectively attractive carry where hikes are well-telegraphed
- EMFX: relative growth, commodity prices, and medium-term capital flows are supportive of stability, but do not expect significant appreciation
